

On Formal Models of Natural Languages

Gábor Prószéky

MorphoLogic
Budapest
proszeky@morphologic.hu

The paper's aim is to give an overview on how formal models are applied to human language description. Complexity of formal models does not necessarily show the real complexity of natural languages. Language model and language are frequently mixed in the literature. Hence, problems of the well-known formal treatment of language complexity can lead to misleading conclusions.