Comparative law has played a significant role in the development of international law. Through comparative studies between the legal systems of civilized nations, international law scholars extract and synthesize the common grounds in order to incorporate them into the structure of international law. Among the methods of legal research, inter alia, legal dogmatic has had the greatest impact on the development of legal institutions and concepts in international law. Legal dogmatic is a method of interpreting and qualifying a norm or rule that is used to provide solutions to legal questions or practical problems resulting from the interpretation of the law. Through the application of legal dogmatism, comparative law manifests itself in the formation of international treaties and general principles as the main sources of public international law. The object of this study is to analyze the impact of comparative law on the implementation of international law, with a particular focus on the United Nations.
